FLiP 2024 is a FREE program that runs May 28 – 31, 2024. It includes meals, snacks, a FLiP T-shirt, and more!

Designed as an opportunity for high school students to explore urban planning as a potential career, FLiP offers a broad exposure to planning.

Through a series of speakers, interactive planning activities, and tours on foot, bus, streetcar, and boat, FLiP provides:

- The chance to network with and learn from planning professionals in the planning and related government services fields in the public and private sectors as well as connect with other students with a passion for planning for a thriving future for our community
- Broad exposure to planning from multiple perspectives, including: comprehensive planning, economic development, environmental, historic preservation, community redevelopment, transportation, geographic information systems, safety, education and research, and more

Since its inception in 2016, the Planning Commission's Future Leaders in Planning program has been a huge hit with students and parents alike. Traditionally, urban planning is a subject students are not exposed to until college or graduate school. FLiP changes that and addresses educational pathways to the career, inspiring future planners.
